Grayed by Battle

The shock of modern battle is so severe to nervous systems that the hair of thousands of young soldiers in the Pacific and European war theaters has turned gray overnight. Queries are coming in from base hospitals and rehabilitation centers asking for hair dyes for campaign veterans, 20 and 25 years of age who "don't want to go back home until my hair looks its natural color." Last week, a manufacturer in Stanford, Conn., announced that his firm would supply hair tint free to all soldiers who want to de-gray before they get back to the USA.
