

The Communist Hunt Doesn't Die

As insiders expected (QUICK, June 5), the FBI began picking up new atom spy suspects. First of the new arrests: Alfred Slack (below), Syracuse, N. Y., chemist, and David Greenglass, ex-Army sergeant at Los Alamos atom plant. Meanwhile a N. Y. C. grand jury failed to find evidence of Administration laxity in prosecuting the five-year-old Amerasia case. But it urged a continued study.

SUSPECT ALFRED SLACK

Background: Part of the grand jury's recommendation—that probes into espionage and loyalty be secret—found an echo in Washington. A bill to take the “smear” and “white wash” elements from Congressional investigations was introduced in Congress. It would put any probe of “urgent national importance” under a commission of four Congressmen, three private citizens. Yet despite repeated criticism of the “circus” nature of investigations, such moves for a change were given little chance of passage. Enough evidence of Russian espionage had come out to keep current probes alive.

“PROTECTING” THE BABY
Justus in Minneapolis Star

Quick
June 26, 1950

p. 4