

No Work . . No Woo

IT SEEMS that at the Alhamba shipyards in Fremont, Oregon, some girls have started what they call a No Work...No Woo movement. The members take the following vow:

I solemnly pledge to not fighting men everywhere that I will not date a man at any time when he is not worth dying for. A gentleman should have war work in not worth dying for.

Harley joined the NWW, a girl cheerfully confesses to date a boy friend who works in a war plant unless he can show a dismissal certifying a full week's work previous to the desired date, or a valid reason for any days off. At the Alhamb yards, air windows dropped from 5.1 per cent to 3.05 per cent soon after NWW got under full steam. The movement is now reported spreading up and down the Pacific Coast.

It looks good to us, because it puts the old war appeal to work for war production in the funnest, most beautiful way we can think of. To NWW's pleasure, a good-looking shipyard worker named Kenneth Christensen, we think, is getting more of them in his order.

Collier's

SEPTEMBER 18, 1945

<http://magazinearticles.com>