

A COLLEGE VIEW

This picture, with an accompanying bit of verse, represents a typical, if humorous, conception of the frivolous young girl of to-day. It appeared first in a Stanford University college paper, and was copied by The Collegiate World, which circulates in the various colleges. The accompanying verses run:

Who is it now that flashes by
With scanty clothes and drooping eye,
For whom great Caesar tore his hair,
Who was this vamp so debonair?

A Flapper.

Who was this biddy called Salome
That robbed John Baptist of his dome,
The one that made mere man leave home?

A Flapper.

Who is it now that flashes by
With scanty clothes and drooping eye,
For whom some sap would gladly die?

A Flapper.

Who strokes the profs upon their nose,
And on their shoulders gently sobs
While some swell mark from them she robs?

A Flapper.

Who it is spends their hard-earned kale
Who makes this plant a woeful tale
Who is more deadly than the male?

A Flapper.

THE LITERARY DIGEST

June 24, 1922