The Children of the European War Lord

ABOVE are shown the seven children of the German Kaiser; six sons and one daughter. All of them are officers in the German army. It may be said of them, as it has been said of their father—and indeed of the whole Hohenzollern family—“Born in a palace; in a barracks bred.” Even the Kaiser's only daughter is the Colonel of the famous Death's Head Hussars. The only portraits of the Emperor, which have shown him in civilian clothes, are those taken during his rare visits to his grandmother in England and he does not look at all natural in them.
